

THE PROBLEM WITH BEING BORN AGAIN IS...

"It's hard enough being born in the first place: who would want to be born again?"

There are many out there who believe that when we die we are born-again, or that some of us will continue to live in another existence. It's as old as many ancient civilizations all across the world from primitive rituals to affluent burials.¹ Many of who believe it's all predestined by some "higher being" or predetermined life cycle. Well who really knows? It's probably less likely that we are. But where's the irrefutable evidence you say... well I don't have any, but what about the other ones.ⁱ You know who, the ones who say that they're "saved" and are better than you because of it. They can't seem to prove anything anyway, they'll just tell you why you should spend now and you'll receive exoneration later. "The transference of guilt makes us whole again."ⁱⁱ This post-life thing is really import, huh? It must be, if you're going to be punished for it - so it must be true. Maybe there is an after-life. "We die, and then we're born again"ⁱⁱⁱ - but be sure to follow directions and follow them to the dotted line, as the slightest change could affect your life in the next - no salvation - no "Miserere mei"^{iv}

There is nothing worse than wasting a lifetime trying to obtain the unobtainable and living a life with fear for committing mortal sin and it's not the immoral (murder, rape, etc) things that most of us will never commit. It's the little things, which we do when we live our lives. It's like your parents punishing you for outgrowing your old cloths, you can't help it, and then to be punished for something you have no control over. How unfair is that.

¹ Not all rituals and views towards death are stupid like Western Judæo-Christian of damnation and suffering. "Day of the Dead" ("Día de los Muertos") normally celebrated by South American countries like Mexico, honour the lives and memories of the dead with a festival lasting two days (Nov 1st & 2nd). Also "All Saints Day" is not the same. Don't let the November 1st date confuse you, Day of the Dead is - Día de los Muertos.

"The Garden of Earthly Delights" (Right Panel - Hell panel) by Hieronymus Bosch

There are always these farfetched stories about moving from world to world, one infamous tale being the Divine Comedy. A comedy indeed. You may think that Dante's journey into the realms of the dead as one hell of an adventure (lame), but would you want to? Here's the scenario, you're pretty much dead, not to mention the fact that you're now in a fucked place where nothing seems to make any sense, and you're judged by your previous life. You'd think it would be over but it's not and no one knows when it will finally end. Sounds pretty much like life - Amen. "In the middle of the journey of our life I found myself astray in a dark wood where the straight road had been lost."

Dante and Beatrice in front of the big light after a long journey through hell and purgatory. Divine Comedy, Paradiso, Canto XXXII. illustration by Gustave Doré Being born-again is just human nature's ever longing desire for immortality. There is no prevention from the inevitable; a baby becomes an adult and will die. "Kill you all, young and old." No discrimination, everything has an expiry date, it would be unnatural for something to live forever and to be born again is unnatural. To be curious of the supernatural is natural; the thing is the supernatural is and always will be big business to someone. Whenever there is someone who is unable to think logically and sensibly it's an opportunity for some cunning fucker to exploit it. Brilliant yet flawed.

Mummification was a brilliant idea at the time (roughly 5 ½ thousand years ago). The idea that "eternal life" was obtainable through the process of embalming and then wrapping. But the thing is it's an "exclusive club" for billionaire's to waste money and someone else's' time. Embalming and wrapping? that literally does sounds like some kind of health-spa treatment. Some things just never change.

We have created too much excessive alchemies to live our life; we have philosophies that can only be described as neurotic. There are so many rules of what to do, what not to do, miracle diets and other bullshit hokum that supposedly prolongs life and well being, drugged up and fucked up. And then there are the parasitic types who feed off your neuroses, "Gurus" of all types all wanting the same thing. In the bible a dude called Simon Magnus² tried to sell the power of the Holy Spirit to Hesus & friends and is forever condemned for eternity for the act of *Simony*³. Which is extremely ironic because that's main thing that preachers and evangelists do today, is sell Simony. In their mind it might not be, but if they were to think about it, yeah, they should be the ones burning in hell.

Dante speaks to Pope Nicholas III, committed to the Inferno for his simony. Divine Comedy, Paradiso, Canto XXXII. illustration by Gustave Doré

² Acts of the Apostles 8:18-24

³ The trafficking of things of a spiritual nature for money.

In the western world we have too much self-restraint and too much freedom.^v It's ironic. This all becomes nothing more than the occupation of time wasting, no real growth, just procrastinating till the end comes. Life is about growth - isn't it? No, maybe that's a wrong at looking at life; maybe life is about the little things and money well spent. Boob jobs, nose jobs, hotdog lips, plastic skin, penis mods and all the other piddle and crap that you used to make RealDolls^{vi} with.

"All Is Vanity" (1892) by Charles Allan Gilbert

But you do it because you want to do it, right? "Fuck what other people say, they're not me." Well you're absolutely right. If you want to life like an asshole, that's perfectly fine. If you want to live life like a saint, that's fine too.

An Evangelist telling people what to do.

Just like a sidewalk-preacher or sandwich board prophet here's a suggestion; go read the "gospel" of Prometheus⁴ and learn the life examples he lived. Prometheus was punished for doing the right thing. The lesson seems pretty self explanatory but still open for interpretation if want to think about it.⁵ "Impaled on the horns of a dilemma" "Double Proposition"⁶, beware life is a trap. The thing is life is a really bad joke; it has a beginning, a really long wanky go nowhere story and finishes with no punchline. Nothing - it just ends. A litany - a boring repetition, life becomes the same old, nothing progressive about it and everything just becomes a decay of meaning.

You cannot really prove or disprove such claims that there is no after-life. For example, proving that pray works; well to think logically about it, to prove such a thing exist. You would need to do a test with some dying people. One group will be prayed for and others who won't be. You can pray all you want to save someone's life doesn't mean it's going to happen; it could work, and not work at all. Most importantly you need to think that a higher being – "God" will save one life and not another. So what's the point? Meatbags always forget that the most important part of "living" is to exist in the one we are in now and not the next because, who knows if there is a next, just make do of what we have now as there won't be a second.^{vii} Eternal "happiness is to be achieved here and now: on this Earth and during one's life-time since, there is no after-life and death is the end of everything."^{viii} Once again ask yourself would you like to be born-again? Would you put yourself through all the repetition of boredom just to feel a snifter of bliss? Like a fart it's gone. The act of a crazy person is to do the same thing and expecting a different result. Don't do it.

⁴ Surely you must know Prometheus; he nicked some flame to give us scumbags so we could heat our hotdogs. He was later punished for it. Just remember every time you eat your hot meal don't forget who was punished for it. Prometheus - big-up.

⁵ "Damned if you do, damned if you don't"

⁶ "Double Proposition"

ⁱ Behold, I show you a mystery: we shall not all sleep but we shall all be changed, in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, at the last trump: for the trumpet shall sound and the dead shall be raised incorruptible, and we shall be changed.

—I Corinthians, 15:51-53

ⁱⁱ נחם nicham

ⁱⁱⁱ שׁוּב shuv

^{iv} "Have mercy upon me." – Psalm li 1.

^v Follow these rules, you'll live longer...

http://www.usatoday.com/news/health/2005-09-11-longer-life_x.htm

^{vi} ACHTUNG! Enthält Nacktheit!

<http://www.realdoll.com/>

^{vii} Walt's Wisdom http://www.waltswisdom.com./

^{viii} Schwarz, A., 1980 Alchemy, Androgyny, and Visual Arts, Leonardo, Vol. 13, pp. 57

FURTHER READING

Here are some books to check out because reading is fun!

"The Passover Plot" (1965)

by Dr. Hugh J. Schonfield

This is an interesting read and it definitely has logical views about the "Resurrection" and life of Hesus. Hated and criticized by Christians and enjoyed by Atheists/Agnostics. Best of all it's not from the Christian perspective for once but by the Jewish perspective. The book caused controversy and attacked for questioning of the New Testament. In short he doesn't believe in the; virgin birth – Heus is human, resurrection was a planned event. Christians believe that denying the resurrection is denouncing the existence of God. A lot of things are explained logically but with scepticism, still recommended to anyone.

You should know, after all you've spent a lifetime figuring it out.